Dear [redacted]

I have been in touch with appropriate officials of the Central Intelligence Agency concerning your situation as outlined in a letter addressed to President Nixon dated 5 April 1970 which you delivered to my office.

It is my understanding that you have been in touch with the Agency concerning reemployment possibilities and that you were informed that your interests will be kept in mind in the event there is a suitable vacancy.

I am informed that only one prospective employer has contacted the Agency since your separation in 1965. In that instance the only information requested and released was your home telephone number.

I was glad to look into these matters for you and hope this letter is helpful.
